How We Evaluated These Sheets When shopping for sheets by feeling the fabric and recording how closely the material drapes to the body. We assess whether sheets are silky or crisp, and if they run cool or trap heat. Sheet prices and ease of care are also taken into account. The picks list above includes what we consider to be the best sheets available on the market. Importance of Clean Sheets A recent Bedroom Poll from the National Sleep Foundation explored the connection between fresh sheets and a good night's rest. More than three-quarters of the survey's respondents said they are more excited to go to bed when the sheets with a fresh scent contribute to their overall sleep experience. You should strive to keep your bedding clean in order to maintain a hygienic sleep area. However, there is such a thing as "too much cleaning" when it comes to sheets. Fabrics slowly break down in washing machines and dryers, and over time this causes the material to deteriorate and tear. Washing your sheets once a week is a reasonable benchmark for most people. This ensures adequate hygiene without too much early wear and tear. Some sleepers may want to consider cleaning their sheets more than once a week. These include people who share their bed with a pet and those with allergies or asthma. Be sure to follow the manufacturer's care instructions. The aded water temperature, detergent, and dryer cycle all depend on the specific fabric and weave. You may want to invest in multiple sheet sets, which allow you to swap in fresh bedding whenever your current bedding needs to be cleaned. The NSF Bedroom Poll found that the average respondent owned three or four individual sheet sets. You can also keep your sleep area hygienic by regularly cleaning the mattress cover is not removable, you can spot clean it if stains occur. One helpful trick is to sprinkle baking soda across the mattress cover to draw out moisture, then vacuum optimal sheets is learning how to sort out the key details from the buzz. In order to try to differentiate their products, some companies in the bedding industry end up using confusing or trumped-up marketing language, especially for luxury items. While some high-end brands and products are truly worth the expense, savvy shoppers can figure out what to look for to avoid overhyped features and inflated prices. To be one of those shoppers, focus on the most important considerations and reflect on which are your highest priorities. Material: A central factor that influences the performance, look, and price of sheets is their material. All fabrics have pros and cons and can be produced to a range of quality standards. Determining which material best aligns with your needs can go a long way in helping you find an ideal sheet set. Weave: This refers to how the vertical and horizontal threads are interlinked with each other. This tends to matter more for certain types of materials, especially cotton. The same base material woven will have a different appearance and feel based on how it is woven (such as with a percale or sateen weave). Price: You'll want to set a budget and use that as a guidepost to filter your options. As you research, you'll find that the range of sheet prices is enormous. There are solid values at many price-points, but you'll get the best return on investment if you can pay a bit more for durable, high-quality sheets. Feel: There are multiple ways to evaluate how sheets feel. One key criteria is softness, as some materials and weaves will feel more plush. Sheets can be very smooth, even buttery, or have more coarseness and manufacturers manipulate thread counts. Additionally, for some materials, thread count is rarely listed and it has less of an effect on the performance of the sheets. Design, Color, and Pattern: While a lot of our focus is on how sheets feel and perform, it's also important to think about how they look, especially if you're someone with a knack for interior decorating. Sheets can have a finish that is shiny, matte, or more understated. The way they drape over the bed and their tendency to wrinkle also affect appearance. Some sheets absorb moisture from the body and allow air to flow through the fabric so that the moisture evaporates. This process, known as moisture-wicking, can help you stay cool even on hot nights and matters most to people who tend to sleep hot. Durability: Most sheets won't last forever, but a high-quality sheet set should hold strong for a few years even with regular use and washing. Lower-quality sheets will be prone to wearing thin, developing holes, losing their softness, and/or fading in color. Ease of Care: To keep your sheets fresh, it's normal to wash them frequently. Some materials require very delicate handling to keep them in top shape. In most cases, washing with cold water and drying on delicate, low-heat settings can prevent damage. Mattress Height: Taller-than-average mattresses require deep pocket sheets. Usually this means any mattresses taller than 12 to 13 inches. Make sure you measure your mattress to ensure that your new sheets properly fit. Different types of sheets — based on the fabric and weave — come with distinct potential benefits and downsides. For example, long-staple cotton is soft and breathable, but it has a higher cost. Linen has excellent temperature regulation but can also be expensive, rougher, and may have a rumpled look. Reviewing the merits of the most popular types of materials used in sheets can help lead you toward your optimal bedding set. Bamboo-Rayon: This material, also known as bamboo-viscose, is a semi-synthetic fiber derived from the bamboo plant. It tends to be stretchy with above-average softness and breathability. It can be expensive and may not be as soft or durable as high-end cotton. Supima Cotton has bigger fibers, helping Supima cotton sheets to be soft and durable. The main downside to Supima cotton is its higher price. Egyptian Cotton; Egyptian cotton is known for having some of the longest and highest-quality fibers available. Like Supima cotton, Egyptian cotton, Egyptian cotton is known for having some of the longest and highest-quality fibers available. Like Supima cotton, Egyptian cotton is known for having some of the longest and highest-quality fibers available. cotton can be quite expensive. Linen: Produced from fibers that come from the flax plant, linen has more texture and a weightier feel. It also has excellent breathability, making it usable year-round. While not naturally soft, some linen is garment-washed to make it softer, and it gradually softens over time. It can be prone to wrinkles, so it may look rumpled unless you go through the process of carefully ironing it. Silk: Renowned for its smoothness, shiny appearance, and top-notch breathability, silk provides high-end performance in bedding. The negatives are that it tends to be very expensive and top-notch breathability, silk provides high-end performance in bedding. Tencel Lyocell: Another type of rayon, Tencel Lyocell is made using pulp from Eucalyptus trees. This fabric material is soft and smooth, and it has effective moisture-wicking properties. It tends to resist wrinkles and is relatively easy to wash and dry. Potential drawbacks include its price and varying durability based on its production quality. Polyesters The biggest selling point for polyester sheets is their accessible price-point. They also tend to be easier to wash and dry. That said, their performance suffers relative to other materials because they are generally less soft, less breathable, and less durable. Microfiber: Microfiber is a type of polyester in which the fibers have been brushed to give them Percale sheets tend to have a more subdued or matte finish. Sateen weave uses an over-under ratio that is greater than 1:1. For example, a common style is four-over-one-under. This leaves more continuous threads in one direction, providing a smoother feel. This pattern is somewhat less breathable than percale. Sateen frequently has a shinier and sleeker appearance. Jersey: Jersey sheets aren't actually woven at all; instead, they are knitted. They have a soft, inviting texture that resists wrinkles and has plenty of stretch. These sheets often have less durability because the fabric can bunch up or pill with frequent use. What Is the Ideal Thread Count for Sheets? A solid thread count yarns themselves are of poor quality. Not all comparisons are apples-to-apples. Some manufacturers use double- or triple-count the thread count but actually be lower-quality, to then double- or triple-count the thread count of 300. An extremely high thread count isn't always better since a super-dense fabric can feel heavy and may stifle cooling airflow. Thread count matters more for certain types of materials than others and may not even be listed for some sheet sets. In most cases, it's rare for a thread count to exceed 600. If you find sheets with a thread count higher than 600, there's a good Cotton: 200 to 400 Percale Weave: 200 to 400 Sateen Weave: 300 to 600 Linen: 80 to 200 (although thread count. As with thread count, these figures shouldn't be treated as the most important determinant of quality. Silk: 17-22 pounds per 100 yards (momme) Microfiber: 90-120 grams per square meter (GSM) Flannel: 170 or more GSM Jersey: 10 or more ounces per yard Frequently Asked Questions Everyone has different needs and preferences when it comes to bedding, so the "best" sheets for you might not be a good fit for other people. The most important factors to consider are material composition and weave, but you should also take thread count, ease of care, and the fitted sheet's pocket depth into account. If you prefer sheets and pillowcases with a soft and smooth feel, then you should choose bedding made from cotton, Tencel, or rayon derived from bamboo. Sateen weaves also give bedding a silky texture that can be more comfortable for people with sensitive skin. The percale weave has a crisper hand-feel that usually becomes softer over time, but won't feel as smooth as sateen. Cotton, Tencel, and rayon derived from bamboo are also great options for people who sleep hot and those who live in warm locales. The same is true for linen. Sheets with percale overall durability, Egyptian and Supima cotton - both long to extra-long staple cotton varieties - tend to outlast other sheet fabrics. Sheet sets made from these cotton varieties can easily last for 2 to 3 years of continuous use, and they often have higher price-points to reflect their longevity. If you're unsure which sheet material and weave is best for you, consider trying out a few different sets from online brands that offer sleep trials. Trial periods typically last 30 to 100 nights for sheet sets, and in most cases you'll receive a full refund - and possibly free return shipping - if you return the items within the trial period. Be sure to read the fine print, as some brands only accept returns on unused thread count. Furthermore, manufacturers frequently inflate thread counts to make their sheets seem superior to their competitors' products. This is especially true for sheets with more than one ply (an individual layer of fabric) make their sheets with more than one ply (an individual layer of fabric). For example, if one ply of a given material has a thread count of 300, then a two-ply section of the same fabric might be listed with a thread count of 600 - even though adding a second layer does little to make the sheet heavier or longer-lasting. The bottom line: Pay attention to thread count, as it does affect how heavy and breathable the sheets can feel. However, take manufacturer assertions with a grain of salt - especially if the thread count exceeds 600. Also remember that thread count does not apply to certain fabrics. Microfiber and flannel are often measured in momme, and jersey is measured in ounces per yard. Thread count of a bedding set, you can use the following ranges to evaluate sheets and pillowcases based on material and weave: Supima cotton: 200 to 400 Rayon or viscose derived from bamboo: 200 to 400 Rayon or viscose der how frequently the items need to be washed and dried. These instructions depend on the material composition and, to a lesser extent, the weave. Keep in mind that each wash cycle for your sheets will contribute to overall wear and tear and shorten the lifespan of your bedding. Delicate materials such as silk and linen are more likely to deteriorate with frequent cleaning. Be sure to follow specific care instructions regarding factors like water temperature and tumble dry setting. That said, most people find that cleaning their sheets every 1 to 2 weeks is sufficient for keeping their sheets e material smelling fresh, while staving off dust and other allergens. You may want to wash your bedding more frequently if small children or pets sleep with you on a regular basis. As with washing, we recommend swapping out your used sheets and pillowcases with a fresh set at least once every 2 weeks. This gives you an opportunity to wash your used bedding and get it ready for the next time you change the sheets. We also recommend investing in two or more sheet sets. This gives you spare sheets and pillowcases to use whenever one of your sets needs to be cleaned. When not in use, bedding sets should be stored in a cool, dry place where they won't be exposed to excessive humidity or moisture. You should expect to pay at least $125 for a luxury sheet set. Discounts and promotions can help make luxury sheets more affordable, but at the end of the day, quality materials and craftsmanship carry a higher price tag. While luxury sheets don't have to cost an arm and a leg, they also won't be found in the bargain bin. Egyptian cotton sheets are worth their premium price if you want to splurge for the material that is typically the most luxurious and durable. Egyptian cotton has an excellent reputation and a trustworthy track record. That said, you don't have to break the bank on Egyptian cotton to get high-guality sheets that are soft and long-lasting. Great value can be found with other types of fabrics, so while Egyptian cotton is a worthy consideration, it's not necessarily the top choice for every shopper. Sheets produced with natural materials like Tencel and bamboo-rayon also frequently involve sustainable production practices. Some fabrics carry certifications from third-party organizations that validate that the material was produced according to organiz, chemical-free, or other standards meant to protect the environment and human health. As a general rule, sheets last for around 2 years. Higher-quality and heavier-duty sheets can last longer, and poorly made sheets with lowend materials will have a shorter useful life. How long the sheets last will also depend on how you use them. If you rotate using two sheet sets, both sets will last longer. In addition, it's critical to follow the manufacturer's instructions for laundering sheets to prevent premature damage. Keeping food and drinks out of the bedroom can also avoid harmful spills and stains. Our product experts have extensive experience testing just about every sleep product on the market.
